Customer Service Policy

1. Technical Support Policy

Customers experiencing technical problems should provide a clear description of the issue and indicate when the problem started.

Technical support agents should confirm whether basic troubleshooting steps have already been attempted before escalating the case.

If a service outage affects multiple customers, the case should be referred to the Technical Support Department for investigation.

Customers should be informed of any confirmed service outage and provided with an estimated resolution time where available.

2. Delivery and Order Support Policy

Customers reporting delayed deliveries should provide their order number and expected delivery date.

Delivery complaints should first be checked against the available order and dispatch records.

If an order has exceeded the expected delivery period, the case should be assigned to the Delivery Support team.

Customers should not be promised a replacement or refund until the order status has been verified.

3. Escalation and Human Review Policy

Customer cases should be escalated for human review when the available information is insufficient to determine the appropriate action.

Cases involving conflicting customer records, suspected fraud, account ownership disputes, or unclear company policy must not be resolved automatically.

Support agents should clearly document the reason for escalation and provide all relevant information collected from the customer.

The final decision in an escalated case should be made by an authorised member of staff.
